PREFACE.

THE present publication is one of a series of volumes in which it is proposed to publish the Matriculation and Graduation Rolls, as well as other historical records, of the University of St Andrews, from its foundation to within three years of the close of the nineteenth century. The scheme has been in contemplation for more than twenty years, and nearly all the necessary lists and documents have been transcribed; but pressure of official work and other considerations have prevented a start being made with the editing and printing until recently. For various reasons it has been found expedient to begin with one of the latest volumes. It will be followed by one of the earliest; and thereafter the remaining volumes will be issued as nearly as possible in chronological order. But as the Rolls are in places both confused and defective, and require to be supplemented from other sources, they must be taken up in the order which seems likely to ensure the greatest accuracy and completeness. Each volume will be complete in itself, with introduction, text, and index; but the unity of the series as a whole will be maintained. When finished, it is confidently believed that the series will not only provide materials for an exhaustive history of the University of St Andrews, but will form a valuable contribution to academical history generally, besides yielding helpful information to workers in all departments of Scottish history. As the University is now within a few years of celebrating the five-hundredth anniversary of its foundation, the time appears to be opportune for placing its more important records before the public; and it is to be hoped that the scheme, now somewhat tardily inaugurated, will receive such encouragement as will secure its being carried out in its entirety with the least possible delay.

In the preparation of this volume I have received much useful assistance from my two daughters. The elder of them wrote out, or typed, nearly the whole matter for the printer, while the younger helped with the checking of the index, and in other ways. I am also very much indebted to Mr John Johnstone Smith, sub-librarian to the University, whose painstaking and skilful reading of the proofs and comparison of them with the original manuscript have saved the volume from many misreadings and typographical errors. So far only three slight mistakes have been discovered that remain uncorrected in the text, and two of them have already been corrected in the index. They were all the result of relying too implicitly on official printed class-lists. Finally, it would be ungrateful not to acknowledge here the constant interest which Principal Donaldson has taken in the progress of this volume through the press, as well as his kindness in reading the proof-sheets of the Introduction.

INTRODUCTION.

THE portion of the Matriculation Roll contained in the present volume covers the last of three well-defined periods into which the history of the University of St Andrews may conveniently be divided. The first extends from the foundation of the University in 1411[1] to the completion of its reformation by the restriction of St Mary's College to the teaching of Divinity in 1579; the second extends from that fundamental change to the union of the Colleges of St Salvator and St Leonard in 1747; while the third extends from the amalgamation of those two ancient Colleges to the final incorporation of an entirely new one in 1897. The last was perhaps not the most stirring and eventful of these three periods, but it was a time of much activity, of many vicissitudes, and latterly of renewed vigour and expansion. In the limited space allotted to this Introduction only the merest outline of the story of this century and a half can be told, and much that would be worth recording must be passed over altogether. Thus, the personal element of the story must be wholly omitted. Biographical sketches of the more distinguished Principals and Professors would doubtless have been acceptable to many readers, but room can only be found for a bare list of names and dates. Nor can matters relating to graduation in the different Faculties be touched upon. The various alterations that have taken place in the manner of conferring degrees and in the courses of study required for them must be left over until the Graduation Roll for the period comes to be printed. In like manner questions relating to administration and to the complicated financial arrangements of the University and its Colleges cannot be referred to, while those affecting constitution and government can only be dealt with summarily. Such topics in any case did not much concern the students who matriculated during these years. They were more interested in the subjects taught within the College class-rooms, in the order of the curriculum, in Bursaries, Scholarships, and Prizes, in their rights and privileges as cives of a university, in the academical and social life of the place, and in their own special organisations for intellectual and physical culture. And it is therefore to such points as these that the following observations are in the main confined.

THE UNIVERSITY.

As an academical body, the University, in 1747, consisted of the Chancellor, Rector, Principals of Colleges, Professors, and matriculated Students. In 1897 its composition was the same, with the addition of registered Graduates and Alumni. But its organisation had undergone a complete change notwithstanding this apparently slight accession to its component parts. In 1747 the bodies entitled to meet and transact business were the Comitia, the Senatus Academicus, the two Colleges, the Faculty of Arts, and such committees as might from time to time be appointed. The Comitia consisted of the Rector, Principals, Professors, and Students. A meeting of the Comitia was thus a general assembly of the resident members of the University for the time being, and its special function was the election of the Rector. The Senatus Academicus consisted of the Principals and Professors of both Colleges, and had the general management of all academical affairs, besides administering the property and funds of the University as a corporation distinct from the Colleges. The Senatus also acted as a Rectorial Court in matters of University discipline; but it did so not of its own right but because it had become customary for the Rector, at his election, to nominate all its other members as his assessors. The University derived no revenue directly from the Colleges, but the Senatus had the power of assessing them for what were deemed general University purposes, such as the upkeep of the Library and the payment of University officers. The Colleges were corporations distinct from, and independent of, the University in all that pertained to matters of business. Each held its own meetings, managed its own property, appointed its own officials, and exercised discipline over its members subject to an appeal to the Rectorial Court. The Faculty of Arts was composed of the Principal and Professors of the United College, and was presided over by a Dean elected annually from within the Faculty. It administered its own revenues and retained to some extent its ancient power of granting degrees in Arts independently of the Senatus Academicus. The Faculty of Divinity had long been merged in St Mary's College, the Principal thereof being regarded as permanent Dean.

These constitutional arrangements underwent very little change until 1858, when the University Court and the General Council were instituted. The University Court at first consisted of six members—viz., the Rector, the senior Principal, and four Assessors—one nominated by the Chancellor and another by the Rector, one elected by the General Council and another by the Senatus Academicus. It was empowered to review all decisions of the Senatus Academicus, and to be a Court of appeal from the Senatus; to effect improvements in the internal arrangements of the University, with the sanction of the Chancellor, and after due communication with the Senatus and the General Council; to require due attention on the part of the Professors to the duties imposed upon them; to fix and regulate class-fees; to censure or suspend a Principal or Professor, or, if necessary, deprive him of his office, subject to the approval of the Queen in Council; and to inquire into and control the administration by the Senatus and Colleges of all their pecuniary concerns, including funds mortified for bursaries and other purposes.[1] The membership of the Court was largely increased and its powers were greatly extended by the Universities (Scotland) Act of 1889. The Court was then made a body corporate with perpetual succession and a common seal, and in it was vested all the property, heritable and movable, formerly belonging to the University and Colleges.[2] The Court thus became the supreme governing body in the University, and to it much of the business formerly transacted by the Senatus was transferred, while the Colleges were deprived of nearly all their administrative powers, and became little more than committees of the Court and of the Senatus.

The General Council instituted by the Act of 1858 received no executive powers. It could only take into consideration questions affecting the wellbeing and prosperity of the University and make representations on them to the University Court.[3] Although its functions were not enlarged by the Act of 1889, the Council obtained increased representation in the University Court and greater freedom of action in dealing with questions of academical policy as they arose.[4] The Council was at first a purely academical body, and was composed of the Chancellor, the members of the University Court, the Professors, and such Graduates and Alumni as were entitled by the Act to membership. In 1868 the Council became a political constituency, having secured the right of electing a member of Parliament conjointly with the General Council of the University of Edinburgh. At the same time its membership was thrown open to all classes of non-honorary graduates, who on payment of a registration fee of one pound became entitled to life membership.[5] In 1881 the payment of this registration fee was made compulsory, so that the General Council was thenceforth intended to consist of the entire body of living graduates, both male and female, whose degrees were gained by examination, in addition to the Chancellor, the members of the University Court and Senatus Academicus, and a few Alumni who were admitted under the original constitution of the Council.[1]

A Faculty of Medicine came into existence in 1862,[2] and a Faculty of Science in 1897, in which year the composition of the three other Faculties underwent revision.[3] The Senatus Academicus had for a long time assumed entire control of the conferring of degrees, so that the powers of the Faculties (including the Faculty of Arts) were confined to recommending to the Senatus such candidates as they deemed qualified for graduation.

From the earliest times the official head of the University had been the Chancellor—occasionally designated the Lord Chancellor. Previous to the Reformation the Bishops and Archbishops of St Andrews were, in accordance with the usual practice among Universities confirmed by Papal Bull, recognised as Chancellors ex officio. This practice was also kept up when Episcopacy happened to be in the ascendant in Scotland between the Reformation and the Revolution. It is not quite clear how the lay Chancellors who alternated with the later Archbishops were elected, but at least one of them—the Earl of Montrose—appears to have been appointed by the King, at the time of a visitation of the University on 15th July 1599.[4] For some years after the Revolution the office remained vacant; but from 1697 to 1858 Chancellors were regularly elected by the Senatus Academicus, which in no single instance chose a Churchman for that exalted office. The Universities (Scotland) Act of 1858 transferred the election from the Senatus Academicus to the newly constituted General Council of the University, of which body the Chancellor was made president. The Chancellorship of the University has long been a life appointment.[5]

Under the original constitution of the University the primary function of the Chancellor was to confer degrees upon persons found qualified for them in any of the Faculties. But over and above this statutory duty many of the resident Chancellors took part in the actual management of the University. They were constantly consulted in matters of doubt and difficulty, and they even at times took the initiative in regulating both University and College affairs. Latterly, although the Chancellor retained his position as head of the University, and was still considered its fountain of honour, it was not required that he should reside within its precincts or even in its vicinity, or that he should take any active share in its government or discipline. He continued, however, to be consulted on all matters bearing upon the welfare of the University, and was also looked upon as conservator of its privileges, an office held at one time by the Archdeacon of St Andrews.[1] By the Act of 1858 the Chancellor's authority was further extended by the provision that all improvements effected in the internal arrangements of the University must receive his sanction.

It very seldom happened that the Chancellor found it convenient to confer degrees in person. This part of his duty was almost invariably performed by his deputy, the Vice-Chancellor, when there was one, or by a Promotor appointed by the University when there was no Vice-Chancellor. At the union of the Colleges in 1747 the office of Vice-Chancellor was vacant. The Duke of Cumberland, who had been elected Chancellor in the previous year, was informed that it would be universally acceptable to the University if His Royal Highness would be pleased to re-appoint Provost Young, the previous Vice-Chancellor, to the office. But the Duke was apparently too busy with his military campaign to attend to so small a matter, and no appointment was made during his tenure of office. Some time after the Earl of Kinnoull's election to the Chancellorship he was requested to nominate a Vice-Chancellor, but he declined to do so, preferring that "things should go on in the same manner as formerly." And so they did go on until 23rd December 1859 when, in conformity with the Universities (Scotland) Act of 1858, the Duke of Argyll appointed Principal Tulloch Vice-Chancellor. With the exception of a few weeks in 1862, when Principal Forbes was Vice-Chancellor, Principal Tulloch held the office till his death in 1886. He was succeeded in the same year by Principal Donaldson, the only other Vice-Chancellor during the period under consideration. So completely did the office of Vice-Chancellor disappear from the University that for more than a hundred years no allusion was made to it in the preamble of diplomas issued to graduates. During all that time degrees were conferred by the Rector, acting in the capacity of Promotor. If the Rector happened to be absent, or indisposed, when a degree fell to be conferred, the Dean of the Faculty of Arts, or some other member of the University, was chosen Promotor for the particular occasion. In 1860 the Vice-Chancellor resumed his ancient function of conferring degrees, and the term Promotor very soon passed out of use except as a convenient (and quite legitimate[1]) designation of the Dean, or other Professor, who presents the graduands of his Faculty to the Vice-Chancellor for their degrees.

From 1747 to 1859 the resident head of the University and president of the Senatus Academicus was the Rector—frequently, but seldom officially, called the Lord Rector. From 1859 to 1889 these offices devolved, ex officio, upon the senior Principal in the University, and from 1890 onwards upon the Principal of the United College who, under the Universities (Scotland) Act of 1889, became also Principal of the University. From 1747 to 1859 the Rector held office for one year only; from 1859 onwards he was elected for a period of three years.

The right to take part in the election of the Rector appears to have been enjoyed by all the students under the

[1] At Bologna "the candidate was then introduced to the Archdeacon and Doctors by the presenting Doctor or Promotor as he was styled." Rashdall: 'Universities of Europe in the Middle Ages,' vol. i. p. 227.

original constitution of the University. In 1475 this right was withdrawn altogether and the election confined to Doctors, Masters, and Graduates. It was restored, however, in 1625, by an act of a Royal visitation;[1] but in course of time the statute of 1475 was reverted to. From 1747 to 1825 the right of election was confined to the Principals and Professors, the students of St Mary's College, and the third and fourth year students of the United College.[2] In 1826 the Act of 1625 was rediscovered, and, having never actually been repealed, was once more put in force, so that from that date all matriculated students again had a voice in the election of the Rector.[3]

Down to 1859 the rectorial election was conducted by Nations. Each of the four Nations elected an Intrant, and these four Intrants met and elected the Rector. In the event of an equality of votes among the Intrants, the retiring Rector had a casting vote. A majority of votes in each of the four Nations does not appear to have been necessary to secure election. The Nations had never been very clearly defined in the older statutes, and so differences of opinion prevailed as to their respective boundaries. The matter was taken up and dealt with by the Senatus in 1826, when the following classification by shires and stewartries was adopted:—

FIFANI.—Natives of Fife, Kinross, Clackmannan, and Perthshire south of the Tay.

ANGUSIANI.—Natives of Forfar, Perth north of the Tay, Kincardine, Aberdeen, Banff, Moray, Nairn, Inverness exclusive of the Isles, Ross, Sutherland, Cromarty, Caithness, and Orkney.

LOTHIANI.—Natives of Linlithgow, Edinburgh, Haddington, Peebles, Selkirk, Berwick, and Roxburgh.

ALBANI.—Natives of Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Wigtown, Ayr, Renfrew, Bute, Lanark, Dumbarton, Stirling, Argyle, the Western Isles, and all who were not natives of Scotland.

Voting by Nations ceased in 1859, when the Scottish University Commissioners ordained that the election of the Rector should in future be determined by a general poll of the matriculated students.[1] At the same time the Professors lost the privilege of taking part in the election, which they had enjoyed from the earliest times.

After the union of the Colleges only four persons were eligible for the office of Rector—viz., the Principal of the United College, the Principal of St Mary's College, the Professor of Divinity, and the Professor of Church History. These were known as the "viri rectorales," of one or the other of whom the electors were bound to make choice. It had been enacted by a Royal visitation in 1597 "that na Rector salbe reiterat in tyme cuming, bot efter thrie yeiris space."[2] If this enactment had remained operative the "viri rectorales" would simply have held office in rotation and the election would have been reduced to a mere form. As it was, the election lost much of its interest by the very limited choice open to the electors, and by the fact that the issue was almost in every case a foregone conclusion. In 1825 a strong feeling prevailed among the students that the restriction was unnecessary and detrimental to the interests of the University, while many of them doubted if it rested on anything more substantial than use and wont. They accordingly took the bold step of electing an "extrinsic" Rector in the person of Sir Walter Scott, who was speedily declared to be ineligible. The matter being now brought to a point, the whole question of the Rectorship was carefully investigated by a committee of the Senatus, with the result that the restriction was proved to be in exact accordance with the "fundamental statutes and immemorial practice of the University." The students thereupon petitioned the Senatus to remove the limitation, but the Senatus silenced them for a time by informing them that there was "no individual of that body who would agree to the extension sought, without such a restriction of the right of voting as would effectually prevent cabals among the students . . . and would in fact render it a matter of little importance to the students on what respectable person the choice might fall."[1]

[1] Ordinance No. 4.

[2] Evidence, p. 197.

In 1843, when the events just narrated had been forgotten, the Intrants, with the concurrence of their constituents, made another effort to secure an outside Rector by unanimously electing Dr Thomas Chalmers. They were immediately called before the Senatus to answer for their conduct in violating the statutes of the University. One of their number submitted to an admonition and was discharged. The others refused to be admonished, and declined the jurisdiction of the Senatus in the matter; whereupon sentence of expulsion from the University was pronounced upon them. Fortunately for the students the St Andrews University Commissioners of 1840 were still sitting and inquiring into other disputes connected with the Rectorship. After maturely considering all the circumstances connected with the case of the offending Intrants, the Commissioners recalled the sentence of expulsion, upon the tender of a sufficient apology. The Commissioners, however, held that the election of Dr Chalmers, being contrary to the statutes of the University, as they had been from time immemorial understood and interpreted, was properly declared null and void by the Senatus.[2]

The next and final attempt at reform was begun in 1856 when, at the instance of Sir David Brewster, the "viri rectorales" were appointed a committee to inquire into the system of electing the Rector and to consider what modifications of the system might be practicable and expedient. This committee made no report until on the eve of the election of 1858, when Professor Brown, the retiring Rector, was authorised to make a statement on the subject to the Comitia. On the day of election Professor Brown, having demitted office, made formal reference to the disadvantages of the existing system of electing the Rector, and to the desirability of introducing such changes as might render what had become a mere mechanical form the free untrammelled exercise of an independent right, and, in some way and measure suited to the times, restore the office to the importance and influence which belonged to it as originally constituted. It was proposed that a committee be appointed to consider the whole subject, and to take competent legal opinion on the changes thought to be desirable. But the meeting was ripe for action, and the proposal to hand the matter over to another committee was defeated. On proceeding to vote, two Intrants supported Professor Buist and two Sir Ralph Anstruther. Professor Brown thereupon gave his casting vote in favour of Sir Ralph on the ground that a majority of the students wished an extraneous Rector. The validity of the election having been called in question, the whole circumstances were explained to Lord Advocate Inglis, who saw no ground for objection to the new departure, and recommended the Senatus to go on to the completion of the act by installing the Rector who had been chosen. On 18th March Sir Ralph Anstruther formally accepted office and was duly installed on 25th March. All further occasion for dispute was removed by the Universities (Scotland) Act, passed a few months later, which completely reversed the previous practice by disqualifying all Principals and Professors from holding the office of Rector.

[1] Evidence, p. 267.

[2] Report of Commissioners, Appendix No. XI.

The limitation of the Rectorship to two Principals and two Professors led to various anomalies which the Act of 1858 entirely removed. The Principals, as heads of their Colleges, presided at all College meetings, but at University meetings both they and the senior Professors not infrequently found themselves presided over by a new and inexperienced Professor of Divinity or Church History. Principal Tulloch's reason for declining office in 1855 was a very sensible one—viz., his recent appointment to the Principalship and his inadequate knowledge of University business. Not one of the eight Professors of the United College, however experienced and competent, could hold the office of Rector, while only one of the three Professors of St Mary's College was excluded. During the period of 112 years from 1747 to 1859 the honour was almost equally divided between the Principal of St Mary's College and the Professor of Divinity, and between the Principal of the United College and the Professor of Church History. The Professor of Divinity was elected 36 times, the Principal of St Mary's College 35 times, the Principal of the United College 19 times, and the Professor of Church History 18 times. Three extraneous Rectors were elected, but disqualified, and in one year there was no election.

Matriculation is the act which admits a student to membership of a University. It consists in his taking the Sponsio Academica by entering his name in the Matriculation Album and in paying the dues which at the time happen to be exigible. From 1859 onwards the method of matriculating differed materially from that previously in vogue. The Senatus Academicus informed the Commissioners of 1826 that "the Matriculation Roll of this University embraces the names of those students only who have for the first time, during the course of the particular session, studied at this University; but a number of them had previously studied at other Universities."[1] Down to 1859 a student thus matriculated once for all. By a single matriculation he practically became a life member of the University. He was at liberty to discontinue his studies and to resume them after any lapse of time at either College or in any Faculty without further enrolment. But, before he could be matriculated at all he had to be registered as a student in at least one class; in other words, he had to be a member of a College before he could be a member of the University. Matriculation in those days came after class-registration, and did not as a rule take place until the session was well advanced. It was, moreover, an act attended with a certain amount of ceremony. On the day and at the hour specially set apart for the purpose the new students assembled class by class in the Library, where their names were enrolled in presence of the Rector. Those attending one or more junior classes were generally introduced by the Professor of Greek; the others were accompanied by their respective Professors. Students who for any reason could not attend on the particular day appointed for the general matriculation were enrolled at other times singly or in groups. Those who had previously attended other Universities did not require to matriculate (having done so elsewhere already), but were simply "received into the album," and held the status they had reached at their former University. There was no separate matriculation for students of St Mary's College. Students entering upon the study of Divinity who had passed through the United College were of course already members of the University, while those coming from outside had only to be received into the album to enable them to rank as Incorporati.

In 1859 all this was changed. Matriculation then became the first formal act in a student's career. He had in fact to be a member of the University before he could be a member of a College. On November 12, 1859, the Senatus Academicus resolved that the Matriculation Roll should, in conformity with the practice of other Universities, be made up annually, and fixed the annual matriculation fee at half-a-crown. In 1862 annual matriculation was made statutory by the University Commissioners, who enacted that "each student shall pay to the University a matriculation fee of one pound at the commencement of each winter session for the whole academical year then next ensuing."[1] This fee was increased to one guinea by an ordinance of the Commissioners of 1889, which came into force in 1894.[2] At first it was attempted to overtake the matriculation of the whole of the students in one day, but this was soon found to be impracticable, and the period during which a student might matriculate was extended to the first month or six weeks of the session, and sometimes even longer. Under the old regulations matriculation and class enrolment were two quite separate transactions. The one was a University affair, and the other a College affair.

[1] Ordinance No. 21, sect. 14.

[2] Ordinance No. 50, sect. 1.

For many years the Professors enrolled their students themselves and collected the class-fees. These duties were afterwards performed by the Secretaries of the Colleges; but the new ordinances largely disregarded the distinction between University and College, and so matriculation and class-enrolment became simultaneous transactions.

Until the new regulations for graduation came into force in 1892 every regular student, especially if he were a bursar, entered upon a well-defined curriculum of study. This curriculum was the result of usage rather than of any special act of University legislation, but it was long somewhat rigidly adhered to, and deviations from it were discountenanced unless they were justified by some peculiarity of circumstances.[1] It consisted of a four years' course, corresponding to the old regenting quadrennium with the classes rearranged to suit the new order of things. Students were expected to begin with the language classes, to commence the study of Mathematics as early as possible, and to attend successively Logic, Moral Philosophy, and Natural Philosophy, each one session. History did not come within the scope of the curriculum, nor, of course, did Medicine. Latin and Greek were the favoured classes, and students were recommended to take them during all the sessions of their course. As a matter of actual practice many of them did so, and thus the senior classes of Latin and Greek largely outnumbered all the others. The taste for Mathematics developed slowly, and towards the end of the eighteenth century most students seem to have avoided the subject altogether. The following table, compiled from such statistics as are available, shows the average attendance at these classes during the five decades following 1790:—

	Senior Latin.	Senior Greek.	Senior Mathematics.
1791–1800	51·6	43·4	7·7
1801–1810	46·4	42·7	14·1
1811–1820	86·1	78·6	22·3
1821–1830	96·9	90·9	33·6
1831–1840	51·1	55·0	23·5

[1] Evidence, p. 285.

For more than a century after the union of the Colleges the normal Arts course was as follows: First Session—Latin, Greek; Second Session—Latin, Greek, Mathematics, Logic; Third Session—Latin, Greek, Mathematics, Moral Philosophy; Fourth Session—Latin, Greek, Mathematics, Natural Philosophy. Students were also recommended to avail themselves of the opportunity of attending History and Chemistry, and the lectures on such other subjects as were from time to time offered. After 1858 this programme underwent some revision to meet the requirements of the regulations for graduation in Arts then introduced. First Latin, First Greek, First Mathematics, and English Literature were placed in the first session; Second Latin, Second Greek, Second Mathematics, and Logic in the second session; Third Latin, Third Greek, Third Mathematics, and Moral Philosophy in the third session; Natural Philosophy and supplementary subjects in the fourth session. In 1888 English Literature and Moral Philosophy were transferred to the fourth session, Logic and Natural Philosophy to the third session; but these rearrangements were suggestive rather than obligatory, and students were allowed a fair amount of latitude in the grouping of their seven compulsory subjects. After 1892 the grouping of classes by sessions was discontinued, as the regulations which then came into operation left students free to make their own choice in the order of their class attendances.

The educational advantages of an extended curriculum and elective courses are doubtless great, but since their introduction an important element in the academical life of the past has begun to disappear. A uniform curriculum had helped to keep alive the feeling of class comradeship which prevailed in the days before Professors were called upon to teach specific subjects. Students who entered in the same year for the most part remained class-fellows throughout their whole course, and so came to know each other intellectually in a way that is no longer possible under a system which has opened up so many avenues to a common end. So great in this respect has been the breach with the past, that it is now possible for two students to go through their whole course simultaneously and obtain the same degree without ever meeting in a single class.

THE UNITED COLLEGE.

The United College was constituted by the union into one corporation of the College of St Salvator (founded by Bishop Kennedy in 1450) and the College of St Leonard (founded by Archbishop Alexander Stewart and Prior John Hepburn in 1512). This union was accomplished by Act of Parliament, and took effect from and after 24th June 1747. Very little is known of the history of the movement in favour of union, and it seems to be impossible now to discover in which College the idea originated, and to whom belongs the credit of having carried it through.[1] That many difficulties had to be overcome is evidenced by the fact that the negotiations extended over so long a period as nine years. As originally conceived, the scheme contemplated the union of all three Colleges, a proposal which the University on 14th August 1738 deemed to be "just and reasonable," and appointed a committee "to draw up a state of the revenues of the several Colleges, the salaries of the several Masters, the manner of their election," &c., with a view to carrying it into effect. On 26th December 1738 this committee reported that the Masters of St Mary's College had, after deliberation, declined to be united into one College with the two philosophy Colleges, and that therefore no "state" of that College was forthcoming. "States" of the Colleges of St Salvator and St Leonard were duly given in, whereupon the University, believing that the union would be very much to its advantage, recommended the Colleges "to proceed in that affair." No further reference to the subject is met with until 18th November 1741, when the Principal of St Leonard's College reported to the Masters that the project of uniting the two Colleges was now so far advanced as to be ready to be laid before Parliament, and that it would be necessary to provide a fund to defray the expenses of obtaining an Act. By a majority of those present it was agreed to advance, from the funds of the College, a sum not exceeding £60 for this purpose, provided a like sum was advanced by the Provost and Masters of St Salvator's College. Financial or other difficulties must have arisen, for it was not until 12th December 1746 that proposals for uniting the Colleges were finally adjusted and signed.

THE UNITED COLLEGE IN 1890.

The reasons for union, as set forth in the preamble to these proposals, were: (1) "the meanness of the Professors' salaries, which must needs be a discouragement to men of learning and abilities to accept of vacant professions"; (2) the ruinous condition of one of the fabrics, not to be repaired and supported without an expense far exceeding what the public funds can afford; (3) the duty "at least to attempt laying a foundation which hereafter may support this sinking though once flourishing University and give hopes of restoring it again to its former lustre." The proposals themselves dealt with the union of the Colleges, with the amalgamation and management of their respective funds and revenues, the redistribution of the professorships, the salaries of Principals and Professors, of patronage and other matters, which, as revised by Parliament, were afterwards embodied in the Act of union. The proposals were signed by three Professors of St Salvator's College, the Principal and three Professors of St Leonard's College, and by the Professors of Mathematics and Medicine, who belonged to neither of these Colleges, but who were to be admitted members of the United College. The principalship of St Salvator's College and one of the professorships were at the time vacant. The three Professors who did not sign the proposals were those who had agreed to retire. The proposals, as submitted to Parliament, were thus signed by the nine persons who became the first Principal and Professors of the United College.

On 17th February 1747 a petition was presented to the House of Commons praying that leave might be given to bring in a bill for uniting the Colleges of St Salvator and St Leonard pursuant to the agreement and resolutions of the several Masters and Professors, if the same should appear for the advancement of learning and the better education of youth in the University of St Andrews. This petition was referred to the consideration of a committee consisting of all the Scotch members and thirty-seven others, with power to send for persons, papers, and records. The committee returned a favourable report on 30th March, when the House ordered that leave be given to bring in a bill for uniting these Colleges, and appointed Mr David Scott, Mr Thomas Erskine, and Sir Ludovic Grant to prepare and bring in the same. The bill was presented to the House and read a first time on 6th April, when the Chancellor of the Exchequer stated that the King, having been informed of the purport of the bill, had given his consent to it so far as his Majesty's interest was concerned. The bill was read a second time on 10th April, and committed to a committee of the whole House. On 27th April Lord Dupplin reported that the committee had gone through the bill and made several amendments thereunto which they had directed him to report to the House. It was ordered that the report be received on 29th April, on which day Lord Dupplin, according to order, submitted the bill with the committee's amendments. These were agreed to by the House and several additional amendments made, after which the bill with its amendments was ordered to be engrossed. On 1st May the bill was read a third time, passed, and ordered to be sent to the House of Lords for their concurrence. The bill was introduced into the House of Lords and read a first time on 5th May. It was read a second time on 7th May, and referred to a committee for consideration. On 11th May the Earl of Findlater reported that the committee had gone through the bill and examined the allegations thereof, which were found to be true, and that the committee had directed him to report the same to the House without any amendment. On 13th May the bill was read a third time and passed. This was reported to the House of Commons on 14th May, and the Act of union received the Royal assent on 17th June.[1]

The various clauses of the Act of union are substantially the same as the corresponding clauses of the signed proposals. A comparison of the two documents shows many verbal alterations and numerous changes of form and expression but no essential departure from the scheme of union worked out by the Professors themselves. Only one of the amendments made by Parliament gave rise to friction; but it only affected a minor financial arrangement which was soon satisfactorily adjusted.

The union of the two Colleges involved the suppression of one principalship and four professorships. The principalship of St Salvator's College and one of its professorships being, as already stated, vacant at the time of union, were suppressed at once, while the professorships held by one member of St Salvator's College and by two members of St Leonard's College, who retired on full pay, were to be suppressed at their respective deaths.

The United College, like its two predecessors, was a residential College, and consisted of a specific number of members. These were made up of one Principal, eight Professors, sixteen bursars on the original foundation, along with such others as might be separately provided for, and the necessary College servants. The first Principal of the United College was the Reverend Thomas Tullideph, formerly Principal of St Leonard's College. The following is a list of the professorial chairs, with the names of their first occupants as provided for by the Act of union:—

Greek.—James Kemp, formerly Professor of Greek in St Salvator's College.

Logic, Rhetoric, and Metaphysics.—Henry Rymer, formerly Professor of Philosophy in St Leonard's College.

Ethics and Pneumatics.—John Young, formerly Professor of Philosophy in St Salvator's College.

Natural and Experimental Philosophy.—David Young, formerly Professor of Philosophy in St Leonard's College.

Humanity.—Ninian Young, formerly Professor of Humanity in St Leonard's College.

Civil History.—William Vilant, formerly Professor of Humanity in St Salvator's College.

Mathematics.—David Gregory, formerly Professor of Mathematics in the University.

Medicine.—Thomas Simson, formerly Professor of Medicine and Anatomy in the University.

No enlargement of the professorial staff was contemplated by the Act of union, and as a matter of fact one hundred and fifteen years had come and gone before a single new professorship was added to the College. In 1808 Dr John Gray of Paddington, London, left a sum of money for the purpose of endowing a professorship of Chemistry. The sum received, after deducting legacy duty, was a small one for such a purpose, and it was found necessary to allow it to accumulate until 1840, when the first Professor of Chemistry was appointed. In the interval the teaching of Chemistry was, by a resolution of the Senatus, to be afterwards mentioned, assigned to the Professor of Medicine. This new Chair was looked upon as simply a private endowment, carrying with it no status either in College or University. In 1844, however, the Professor was received as a member of the Senatus Academicus and a University Professor; and in 1862 he was added to the list of Professors in the United College, with the proviso that he was not to be entitled to any payment out of the common stock or revenues of the College.[1]

The Chairs of Greek, Humanity, and Mathematics underwent no change, except that the Professors, who at first taught junior and senior classes only, afterwards taught a third or more advanced class. The third class in Mathematics is said to have commenced so early as 1793, although no trace of it appears until 1822.[1] The third classes in Greek and Humanity date from 1853. The Chair of Natural and Experimental Philosophy has likewise remained substantially the same, but the subject has undergone considerable expansion. In place of a single course of lectures to one class, four courses of instruction were latterly given—viz., an elementary course of 100 lectures, an advanced course of 60 lectures, and an elementary and advanced course of training in Practical Physics.

[1] Ordinance No. 21, sect. 11.

English Literature was introduced into the curriculum in 1861 under the Universities Act of 1858, and the teaching of the subject was assigned to the Professor of Logic, Rhetoric, and Metaphysics. This combination lasted exactly thirty years, Professor Henry Jones being the last Professor of Logic to deliver a course of lectures on English Literature, in 1891-92. From 1892-93 to 1896-97 a full course of lectures on the English Language and Literature was delivered by Professor M'Cormick of University College, Dundee, under a special agreement sanctioned by the University Commissioners. On 15th January 1897 an ordinance founding the Berry Chair of English Literature was approved by the Queen in Council, and on 14th March the Reverend Alexander Lawson, B.D., was appointed its first occupant.

The professorship of Ethics and Pneumatics was soon changed to Moral Philosophy. It was afterwards expanded to Moral Philosophy and Political Economy, but it was again restricted to Moral Philosophy by an ordinance of 15th January 1897.[2] Political Economy was first taught in the United College by the Professor of Moral Philosophy about 1818-19, but not apparently as a separate class. Professor Chalmers began on his own initiative to lecture on Political Economy, and taught separate classes during the last three years of his tenure of office (1825-26 to 1827-28). These classes were attended by 35, 29, and 28 students respectively. His successor, Dr George Cook, continued the two subjects in the same class, although there were occasionally students of Political Economy who were not students of Moral Philosophy, and vice versa. This appears to have been the practice followed by Professors Ferrier, Flint, and Knight—all students of Moral Philosophy being returned as students of Political Economy. The subject was dropped from the curriculum altogether when the new regulations for graduation in Arts came into force in 1892, and was not again restored within the period covered by this volume.

[1] Evidence, p. 333.

[2] Ordinance No. 48, sect. 5.

The professorship of Civil History was the only new Chair founded by the Act of union, and unhappily it turned out to be a failure from the first. Not one of the holders of the Chair was able to carry on a regular class for any length of time. Professor Forrest (1765-73), in default of students of History, is reported to have taught Modern Languages. He had evidently been a person of some versatility, for he was afterwards transferred to the Chair of Natural Philosophy. His successor, Professor Cleghorn, was scarcely more successful, although certain bursars were for a time taken bound to attend his class. Professor Adamson (1793-1808) adopted the plan of delivering short courses of lectures free, and so attracted an average of over a dozen hearers. Professor Ferrie (1808-50) admitted to the University Commissioners in 1827 that his Chair had been a sinecure, so far as lecturing was concerned, ever since he had it, and he suggested that on its becoming vacant it should be converted into a Chair of Modern Languages—a suggestion which the Commissioners adopted. But he withdrew this suggestion when the commission of 1840 visited St Andrews, on the ground that Modern Languages were sufficiently provided for in the Madras College, then recently founded, and that students had been for some years attending his classes in considerable numbers. When the Chair became vacant in 1850, the Senatus requested the Patron to select a person competent to teach Natural History, and on the understanding that he would teach it in all its branches. The Patron agreed, and presented Dr William Macdonald to the Chair of Civil History on the understanding that he would also teach Natural History. This anomalous combination was formally sanctioned by ordinance in 1862, the Professor of Civil History being made also Professor of Natural History, and a member of the Faculty of Medicine.[1] The experiment did not improve matters much. Professor Macdonald is credited with one class in Civil History and six classes in Natural History during his twenty-five years' occupancy of the Chair. In 1861 a statement was industriously circulated to the effect that Dr Macdonald was usually domiciled in Edinburgh during the University session at St Andrews, and that he did not lecture there; but the Professor was able to produce evidence from former students that he had conducted classes at least to the extent mentioned. His course in Natural History extended to fifty lectures only, and included Mineralogy, Geology, and *Z*oology. Under Professors Nicholson and M'Intosh classes in Natural History only were offered, —the former teaching *Z*oology and Geology in alternate years, and the latter confining himself to *Z*oology.

The Chair of Medicine was even less successful than the Chair of Civil History. The first three occupants of it are not known to have lectured regularly to students on any branch of Medicine, but they appear to have "demonstrated the skeleton" and given instruction in Practical Pharmacy occasionally. When the Chair became vacant in 1811, Dr Robert Briggs was appointed to teach Chemistry and Chemical Pharmacy, which he did until his death in 1841. His successor, Professor John Reid, lectured on Descriptive and Comparative Anatomy and on General Physiology from 1841 to 1849. From 1849 to 1863 Professor George Edward Day held classes regularly for instruction in General Physiology and Comparative Anatomy. From 1863 to 1896 Physiology only was taught, the object of the course being to instruct the general student, as well as the student of Medicine, in the Anatomy and Physiology of the human body and in the more essential departments of sanitary science.

[1] Ordinance No. 21, sect. 8.

In 1876 a Chair of the Theory, History, and Practice of Education was founded by the trustees of Dr Andrew Bell, a native of St Andrews, and a former student and graduate of the University. Although associated with the United College, the Chair of Education was a University Chair, and no class-room was provided for it in the College buildings. The Professor had either to obtain the loan of a class-room or lecture in his own house (which he frequently did). This Chair did not at first attract many students, but its inclusion in the Arts curriculum under the new regulations of 1892 led to a marked improvement in this respect.

Ordinance No. 17 (1892) of the Scottish Universities Commission empowered the University Court, after consultation with the Senatus Academicus, to appoint Lecturers in any subject not already taught within the University. Under this ordinance University Lecturers were appointed in the following subjects up to 30th September 1897: Botany, French, History, Anatomy, Materia Medica, Physiology, and Modern Greek.

Some elementary instruction in Botany had been given in the United College more than fifty years previously in the courses of lectures in Natural History delivered by Mr John Gibson Macvicar in sessions 1825-26 and 1826-27.[1] It was also to some extent treated of in the lectures of the professors of Natural History from 1850 onwards; but it was not until 1888 that it was taught systematically as a specific subject. In that and the two following years Dr John Hardie Wilson delivered lectures on Botany, qualifying for graduation in Medicine and Science in all the Scottish Universities. In addition to lecturing, Dr Wilson spent much time in laying out a botanic garden suitable for teaching purposes. This nucleus of the later and larger University botanic garden was opened by Professor M'Intosh on 28th June 1889. Finding little inducement to carry on the work, Dr Wilson accepted another appointment and was succeeded by Mr R. A. Robertson in 1890. Shortly afterwards, Dr Hugh F. C. Cleghorn of Stra-vithie gifted £1000 towards the endowment of a Botanic lectureship or future Chair in the United College, and on 6th April 1891 Mr Robertson was appointed the first regular University Lecturer in Botany. Winter and summer courses in Botany (theoretical and practical) were then instituted in the Faculties of Arts, Science, and Medicine.

The first University Lecturer on the French Language and Literature was appointed on 3rd December 1892. On 22nd September 1894 the scope of the lectureship was extended so as to include Romance Philology. French was thus the first modern foreign language to receive recognition as a subject qualifying for graduation in the University. But the subject was not a new one to the St Andrews student. In November 1755 Mr Percival Stockdale, with the approbation of the Professors, undertook to teach a French class, but as he left the College to enter the army in the following February, the experiment was a very brief one.[1] On 19th November 1773 the Rector laid before a meeting of the University a letter from the Town Council acquainting them that the town had agreed to give Mr M'Gregor £5 sterling annually as a teacher of French in this place, provided the University give him £15 sterling annually.[2] This proposal was referred to the consideration of the two Colleges, and a year later (14th November 1774) a committee was appointed "to settle the matter with the French master." No further reference to Mr M'Gregor has been found, but on 15th May 1782 Mr Charles Pepper, French teacher, is reported to be on the point of leaving St Andrews and in need of money. The United College resolved to give him £5 as its just proportion, while St Mary's College agreed "to allow him fifty shillings sterling providing he shall remove himself peaceably without giving them any trouble." The next mention of the subject is on 4th January 1794, when a letter from Mr Stewart of St Fort relating to the appointment of a French teacher was read. The Rector was directed to reply that the University entertained a just sense of the importance of that branch of education, but had been discouraged from renewing the establishment of a French teacher on account of repeated disappointments with regard to the character of the person who had previously acted in that capacity. What the University required was "one who is not a provincial, is qualified to teach French grammatically, and who knows so much of English as to be easily understood by his scholars." It was also desirable, though not essential, that he should be able to teach Drawing. After some correspondence with Mr Stewart, and Dr Carmichael Smyth of London, Monsieur Lagrandierre, a native of France, was induced to come to St Andrews and to take up the duties of French master in the United College. He continued to hold the appointment until April 1802 when, owing to failing health, he resolved to return to France. On his resignation being intimated, the Rector was appointed to express to him the sense which the University entertained of the propriety of his conduct, and the elegance of his manners, and their earnest wishes for his health and happiness in his native country. He also received a parting gift of twenty guineas as an expression of the esteem and regard in which he was held by the University. Steps were immediately taken to appoint a successor to M. Lagrandierre, and on 6th August 1802 the Reverend James Hunter, Minister of Dunino, was unanimously elected French teacher during the pleasure of the University. Two years later Mr Hunter was appointed Professor of Logic, and as he expressed a wish to continue teaching French, he was allowed to do so on relinquishing the salary attached to that office and contenting himself with the fees. This arrangement seems to have lasted until 1817, when the Principal and Masters of the United College authorised M. Samuel Messieux to open a class in the College for the instruction of students in French. On 8th January 1834 M. Messieux was appointed first teacher of Modern Languages in the newly founded Madras College, St Andrews, his chief recommendation being that he had most successfully taught a French class in the University in connection with the United College. Notwithstanding this appointment, M. Messieux retained his position in the University until his retirement in 1854; and, according to the annual advertisement of the College classes, he offered instruction in German and Italian as well.[1] There is, unfortunately, no record of the number of students who attended these French classes, but there must have been enough to justify their existence, or the University would not have continued so long to make provision for them.

The remaining lectureships having been instituted so late as 1896, were only available to those students who matriculated in the last year included in this volume. With the exception of Modern Greek (which was financed by the Marquess of Bute), all the subjects had, like Botany and French, already been taught in the University. History had indeed been a separate professorship, while Anatomy, Materia Medica, and Physiology had been lectured upon at one time or other by the Professor of Medicine. It is worth recording, however, that the lectureship in Physiology (also at first provided by the Marquess of Bute) was held for two years by the first lady-lecturer in the University.

Although lying outside the University curriculum, notice may properly be taken here of the Gifford lectureship, founded in 1887 "for promoting, advancing, teaching, and diffusing the study of Natural Theology, in the widest sense of that term."

Beginning with the academical year 1892-93, the teaching staff of the College was augmented by the appointment of University Assistants to most of the Professors, under the same ordinance that made provision for Lecturers.

[1] On 22nd October 1852 a Lieut. Torckler petitioned the College for the use of a room in which to teach the French language, but the College declined to accede to the request.

Assistants had from time immemorial been employed by Professors in the work of their classes, but these were almost always private assistants, appointed and paid for by the Professors themselves. Some of them were indeed more than assistants, and practically had entire charge of the class-work. Thus, in the time of Professor Nicolas Vilant the Mathematical classes were taught by assistants for many years in succession, the Professor himself being seldom able to leave his room on account of ill-health. The new University Assistants, on the contrary, were to be recognised officials of the University, and entitled to various academical privileges. The right of Professors to employ private assistants was not withdrawn by the ordinance, but these assistants were prohibited from taking part in the public work of the classes without the permission of the University Court.

The Act of union made provision for the maintenance of sixteen bursars in the United College. Six of these were on the foundation of St Salvator's College, and ten upon the foundation of St Leonard's College. There were in addition four servers, who in return for board and lodging on the same scale as the Foundation bursars performed menial duties connected with the College tables. The value of each Foundation bursary was at first £5, 11s. 1d., and that sum was paid to any bursar who obtained permission to live outside the College walls. This equivalent was increased in 1820 to £8, and in 1829 to £10, which remained the normal value of all Foundation bursaries till 1895—a proposal to raise it to £12 having been rejected in 1831. From 1878 onwards, through the generosity of several citizens of Dundee, some of these bursaries were, however, considerably increased in value. In 1895 ten of these bursaries and serverships were combined so as to form five bursaries of £20 each, the other ten being continued at £10 each as before.

At the time of the union these were the only bursaries open to competition by students entering the College. Although originally intended for poor students only, poverty alone was never a sufficient qualification to hold them. And so on 12th October 1747 it was agreed that the Foundation bursaries should be disposed of by comparative trial, the presumption no doubt being that only those who really required them would compete for them. At first the examination was confined to the Latin language; Greek and Mathematics were afterwards added; and ultimately Modern Languages and Dynamics.

About a dozen presentation or preference bursaries had been founded in the two Colleges previous to 1747. These passed to the United College, which in some cases administered the funds, although the bursars were usually presented by private patrons, who did not always take the intellectual attainments of their presentees into account. Only three additional bursaries were founded in the second half of the eighteenth century; but the number of foundations increased so steadily in the nineteenth century that in 1896 the College was in possession of over one hundred bursaries ranging in value from £5 to £50 each per annum. Although the eleemosynary character of the bursary system has not been altogether swept away, there has been a constant tendency to award not only competitive bursaries but also presentation bursaries on the basis of merit alone. The requirements of the preliminary examination instituted in 1892 render this course almost unavoidable, while the increased facilities for obtaining secondary education throughout the country make it more easy of accomplishment.

Scholarships were first instituted in the United College in 1862 by a supplementary ordinance of the Scottish Universities Commission, which utilised for that purpose the surplus revenue of the Ramsay foundation, dating from 1681. The Ramsay scholarships were succeeded by the Guthrie scholarships in 1864, by the Bruce scholarships in 1865, and by the Berry scholarships in 1895. In 1896 the number of scholarships in the College was thirteen—two of the annual value of about £40 each, tenable for four years; two of the annual value of £50 each, tenable for two years; five of the annual value of £100 each, tenable for one or two years; and four tenable for four years—value for the first year, £100, and £50 for each of the following years.

The prizes attached to the United College are all of nineteenth-century foundation. Soon after his election to the Chancellorship of the University in 1765, the Earl of Kinnoull offered a variety of prizes or premiums for competition annually. For a time his lordship came regularly to St Andrews and presented them in person at a public exhibition, when the successful essayists read their compositions aloud. The morals of the time were lax, and competitors did not scruple to obtain illicit help in the composition of their themes. The prizes came to be looked upon as a hindrance rather than an aid to real scholarship, so on the election of a new Chancellor in 1788 they were, by the advice of the Senatus, discontinued. In 1808 Dr John Gray of Paddington founded a prize for the best essay on some prescribed subject in literature or philosophy. In 1834 Dr John Carstairs of Stratford Green founded prizes in connection with the Mathematical classes, and these were supplemented in the same department by the Duncan prize, founded in 1858 in memory of Professor Duncan, and by the Tullis prizes, founded in 1876 by William Tullis, Esquire of Rothes, Markinch. In 1853 Henry Miller, Esquire, London, a native of Scotland, founded a number of prizes, amounting in all to about £60 a-year, for the encouragement of learning in the College. In 1895 these prizes were combined into two, to be awarded on a higher standard of examination. In 1865 a prize of £10 for excellence in the study of Logic and Metaphysics was instituted by Mrs Tyndall Bruce of Falkland, and in 1887 a Chemistry prize, of about the same value, by Mr Walter Forrester, a graduate in Arts of the University. Over and above these endowed prizes, the Senatus Academicus, and afterwards the University Court, granted an allowance for class prizes and medals at the close of every session.

As already mentioned, one of the reasons for uniting the two Colleges was that the fabric of one of them was in such a ruinous condition that it could not be repaired nor supported without an expenditure far exceeding what its public funds could afford. This could only apply to St Salvator's College, because the buildings of St Leonard's College had been repaired and largely rebuilt within the first thirty years of the century, and so could scarcely have been in so ruinous a state in 1747. But when the union was accomplished and it became necessary to decide which of the two was to be the home of the United College, the choice fell upon the dilapidated pile in North Street. On 8th July 1747 "the Masters considering that it will be proper after the commencement of the next session of College to lodge all the students in one College they appoint . . . a committee to visit both Colleges to see which of them will be most convenient for that end, and to report." Next day the committee reported "it was their opinion that St Salvator's College would be most convenient for lodging the students, if it was repaired, which they thought might be done at no great expense, and that until it was repaired the students might be lodged in St Leonard's College. Of which report the Masters approved and resolved accordingly; and they further recommend to the former committee to call tradesmen to see how the said reparations of St Salvator's College may be done most efficiently and on least expense, and that in the scheme of the said reparation they lay out schools for the several Masters, and a convenient fine room for keeping the papers of the United College."

The committee was called upon several times to report its diligence, but made no response, and the matter lay in abeyance till 10th June 1748, when a proposal was made to repair St Salvator's College for the reception of the students against the next session. The Principal gave it as his opinion that this design ought to be delayed at least till the debt contracted on account of uniting the two Colleges was paid off;[1] but the majority of the Masters, being of a contrary opinion, appointed a committee to survey the rooms and see how many of them might be fitted up for lodging the students and to bring in an estimate of the expense of that reparation. On 13th June this committee reported that they had surveyed the rooms and had found no less than thirty-two rooms which might easily be fitted up for lodgings, besides six schools. Some minor repairs were forthwith effected, but very little money was spent on the old buildings during the next few years. On 13th May 1754 it was agreed, on the report of a committee appointed on 3rd April, to make certain alterations on the west wing (involving the demolition of a projecting building known as "Montrose's chambers"), and also to employ an architect to make a plan of a building the whole length of the north side of the area. Plans and estimates for the new building were submitted on 25th May, and contracts were signed for carrying out one half of the scheme, consisting of ten rooms and two schools. This new building was "founded" on 8th July 1754. It is not easy to follow, in the College records, the various stages of its erection, but it appears to have been completed by 1757, and to have cost £1467, 16s. 5d. It was a long narrow building three storeys in height, with an open arcade of thirteen arches running from end to end of the south side. A good deal of old material from the building which it superseded was used in its construction, and altogether it must have been of a somewhat flimsy nature. It was covered with blue slates specially brought by sea from the west of England, but these were condemned as "quite faulty and insufficient" in 1769, and ordered to be taken off and replaced with grey slates from Arbroath. Even then the roof must have been far from satisfactory, for in 1796 it underwent further repairs at a cost of £82, 14s. 8½d. On 29th January 1763 a plan and estimates were obtained for the erection of a building, "three stairs high three rooms in length," on the east of the College area. The probable cost of this building was to have been £660, 13s. 5d., but the Masters delayed going on with it, and nothing more is heard of it. In the summer of the same year additions on a small scale were carried out on the south side of the area, immediately behind the church and westwards from the vestry, which was also included in the reparation. These additions were more of the nature of domestic offices, except that the remains of a chapel at the north-west corner of the church were repaired and heightened so as to be made capable of accommodating students. The cost of these operations amounted to £94, 15s. 8d., and they were to be completed before the opening of the session. No further extensions of the fabric were made during the eighteenth century, but a good deal of money was annually required to keep the existing buildings in repair.

Although sums amounting to about £5500 had been expended in the erection and repair of the College buildings between 1747 and 1824, the Commissioners of 1826 found them to be in a lamentable condition. A committee of their number made a special inspection of them on 31st July 1827 and reported in these terms: "The western part is extremely old, and appears entirely ruinous and incapable of repair. In this portion most of the class-rooms are contained, and these are extremely mean, small, confined, and insufficient; not in general fit to accommodate the classes without the risk of detriment to the health of the Professors and students. The remainder of the fabric of the United College, although erected at a much more recent period, is also in a most dilapidated state. Some of the class-rooms are in this part of the building. But they are entirely unfit for that purpose, and there is no part of the building which could be so altered as to afford the accommodation necessary for the classes of the College. The building is too narrow to admit of any such alteration, even if the fabric is considered to be sufficient, which appears to be extremely doubtful."[1] The evidence given a few days later by several of the Professors was equally strong. Professor John Hunter said the buildings generally were in very bad repair. Ever since he knew the College the east side of the area had been quite ruinous and dilapidated. The north building was in the opinion of tradesmen in a very bad state both as regards walls and timber. The west building was so much off the perpendicular that it had been necessary to bind the walls together with cross-beams. He was ashamed when any person from a distance wished to see the College, the exterior of it was so discreditable. Professor Jackson thought an entirely new set of class-rooms was required. Some of them were tolerably good, but they were for the most part too low in the roof and too narrow and confined. The whole place was in such a condition that without a new building it could not be shown without shame to any stranger, especially to any Englishman. Professor Duncan also complained of the inadequacy of the class-rooms, and described the general appearance of the buildings as certainly not respectable for a great seminary of education, and apt to degrade it in the eyes of the students as well as of the public. Professor Chalmers said that his own class-room was a very mean and shabby-looking place. They "should not only have a complete suit of class-rooms, but a fabric of somewhat creditable aspect, that would announce itself to be a College, and not be mistaken for an old cotton-mill."[1]

Lord Melville, the Chancellor of the University, had already been urging upon Government the necessity of repairing or rebuilding the College fabric, and plans of the old and ruinous buildings and of the College grounds had been prepared in 1825 at the request of Sir Henry Jardine, King's Remembrancer in the Exchequer of Scotland. On 28th December 1827 Lord Melville again took up the matter in a detailed letter to the Treasury, which was officially communicated to the University Commissioners. On 17th October 1828 plans prepared by Mr Reid, King's Architect for Scotland, for repairing and restoring the buildings, were inspected by the Commissioners and approved of; and on 24th November following, the Lords of the Treasury informed the Commissioners that the Barons of Exchequer in Scotland had been authorised to proceed with the works.[2] A commencement was made in 1828, and by 1831 an entirely new east wing had been erected upon ground specially acquired by the Government for the purpose. This new building, although a great improvement on anything that had preceded it, was by no means a successful experiment in collegiate architecture. Not only was the exterior lacking in taste, but the internal arrangements were ill-designed and wasteful of space. The heating and ventilating of the new class-rooms were most unsatisfactory. Dry rot soon made its appearance in the woodwork, and before long the whole flooring in the lower rooms had to be renewed.

Having proceeded so far, the work of rebuilding the College came to a sudden stop, and notwithstanding much expostulation with the Government it was not resumed for nearly fourteen years. During that period the College was obliged to expend considerable sums in maintaining the old buildings and in endeavouring to make the new one serviceable. In 1843 the College enlisted the services of Sir Hugh Lyon Playfair, Provost of the city, who took up the matter with such heartiness and vigour that within a few months fresh plans for additional buildings and alterations, prepared by Mr Nixon, Queen's Architect for Scotland, were submitted and approved of.

The old north building was forthwith demolished and, in 1845-46, replaced by the present north wing of the College, containing hall, museum, class-rooms, and other accommodation. As soon as this new building was ready for occupation the old west wing was pulled down, with the exception of the small portion which now forms part of the janitor's house, with secretary's office, &c., above. It was at first intended to enclose the frontage thus opened up to Butts Wynd with a parapet wall and railing to show off the new buildings, but at the urgent desire of the Principal and Professors a high wall with a large gateway near the centre was substituted. In place of the arcaded corridor which ran the whole length of the old north building, the Principal and Professors wished a covered way to be erected on the inner side of the new wall to protect the students in wet and stormy weather. But on the suggestion of the architect a spacious cloister was instead erected along the north wall of the church, on the site of the vestry and other buildings above alluded to, which had been cleared away in 1839. This was afterwards found to be a mistake. With a northern exposure and a cold draught constantly blowing through it, this convenient and attractive looking retreat was no real shelter to students in winter. In 1864 its eight openings were closed up, and a portion of it was converted into a meeting-place for students' societies, under the name of the Cloister Hall. Being no longer required for such purposes, the cloister was afterwards used partly as a gymnasium and partly as a drill-hall in connection with the students' battery of volunteers. It was not until 1851 that all the additions to and alterations upon the College buildings were completed. They were then taken over by the Treasury as national property, and for the next forty years were maintained at the public expense. On 1st April 1890 they were transferred to the University Court, which thereafter became responsible for their maintenance.[1]

In 1861, mainly through the exertions of Principal Forbes, a joint-stock company was formed for the "establishment and conduct of a College Hall for the residence of the sons of gentlemen attending the University of St Andrews, . . . and to provide, on moderate terms, a home and the best possible aid in their studies for young men prosecuting these in the University of St Andrews." The promoters of this Hall sought to restore, in some measure, to the University the College system as it formerly prevailed. In it the habits of family life were preserved, all meals were taken in common, and morning and evening prayers were conducted by the Warden. By its means it was hoped to lure back to St Andrews the sons of the Scottish nobility and gentry who for more than half a century had been borne southward to the English universities. The venture was successful, and during its early years the Hall prospered so well that the company was induced to face the more ambitious project of erecting a large building specially fitted for its purpose. The Hall had been appropriately started in buildings which once formed part of St Leonard's College, including the house understood to have been occupied by George Buchanan when principal. On 26th April 1867 the foundation-stone of a handsome building capable of containing upwards of thirty students was laid with masonic honours. This new Hall, which cost upwards of £8000, was opened in November 1868; but, unlike the old one, it did not prosper, and was closed in 1874—the company being wound up and the building sold.

On the admission of women to the University in 1892, steps were immediately taken to provide a Hall of Residence for such of them as preferred to live together under a Head. As a temporary arrangement, the house number 79 North Street was secured for session 1892-93, and Argyle Lodge for 1895-96. No provision for residence was made during the two intervening years. Meanwhile a permanent University Hall for women students on a site granted by the University Court on the lands of Rathelpie was in course of erection, and was ready for occupation at the beginning of session 1896-97. The Hall owed its existence very much to the zeal and activity of Professor Knight, who obtained a grant of £2000 towards its cost from the Pfeiffer Trust, besides numerous donations from private individuals.

In January 1884 a Marine Zoological Station was organised by Professor M'Intosh in connection with the Fishery Board for Scotland. A wooden building standing on the East Bents between the harbour and the sea, which had been erected some years before as a temporary fever hospital, was utilised for the purpose. It was neither wind- nor water-tight, but in spite of many discomforts much valuable research was carried on in it, not only by members of the University but by zoologists of eminence from the Continent and elsewhere. At the end of twelve years this important work was transferred to the very commodious and well-planned Gatty Marine Laboratory, the gift to the University of Charles Henry Gatty, Esquire of East Grinstead, which was opened by Lord Reay on 30th October 1896.

In 1891 a Chemical Laboratory was presented to the University by Mrs Thomas Purdie of Castlecliffe, St Andrews; and in 1897 preparations were begun for the erection of the Bute Medical Buildings designed to accommodate the departments of Anatomy, Botany, Physiology, and Materia Medica.

Immediately after the union of the Colleges it was resolved "that the students shall regularly attend public worship every Lord's day in the church of the United College"; and the Hebdomadar was directed "to convene the students every Sunday before public worship begin, in the fore and afternoon, in the common schools of the College where they lodge and conduct them to church." The "church of the United College" meant St Leonard's church, of which the Principal of the United College was minister, although he seldom preached. St Salvator's church had long been disused as a place of worship, and was then in a state of neglect and decay. This arrangement, however, did not last long, for on 10th October 1750 the Masters "considering that the students were now lodged in St Salvator's College, which is in the town parish of St Andrews, and that the United College has a more commodious seat in the Town church than in St Leonard's, it was resolved that henceforth the students shall be conducted to the said Town church, and that the porter be ordered to clean the College loft there, and to intimate to all persons who had been allowed to sit there, that they must provide themselves elsewhere; and it was recommended to Dr Simson to inquire about the price of a carpet proper for the Masters' seat in the said loft." But before ten years were over another change was effected which in course of time led to much contention and litigation. The roof of St Leonard's church began to fail, and its renewal threatened to tax heavily the limited resources of the College. As an alternative, the repair of St Salvator's church was thought of and ultimately adopted, chiefly because it was believed to be the cheaper scheme of the two. It was by no means so in the end, but its adoption probably helped to save from further dilapidation the finest unruined specimen of ecclesiastical architecture in St Andrews. In 1759 the local presbytery sanctioned the transference of the Leonardine congregation from the church of St Leonard to the church of St Salvator. As the reparation of the one church involved the partial demolition of the other, no service could have been held in either of them for more than a year. By the summer of 1761, however, St Salvator's church had been fitted up, and seats set apart for the Principal and Masters. The removal of the Masters and students from the Town church had been taken for granted by the presbytery, and as the loss of their contributions to the "plate" would affect the poors' fund of the parish, it was agreed to take the students' offerings separately at the College church (as it now came to be called), and to hand them over to the treasurer of the Town church. The minutes of the Kirk-session for 3rd December 1761 show "that for some days past the collection of the students had been sent from the congregation of St Leonard's by the several Masters who had happened to be Hebdomadars." This curious practice went on until towards the middle of the nineteenth century.

Although attendance at the College church was at first uniformly enjoined upon all students,[1] it soon became a recognised practice for the Principal to grant dispensations to those who belonged to dissenting communions. By 1780 this practice was so firmly established that it obtained the formal sanction of the College, and was made the subject of a special by-law. At a meeting held on 13th May of that year, the College came to the following, among other resolutions: "That instead of two Masters as at present, the Principal and all the Masters shall meet regularly in the common schools before sermon, and go from thence with the students to church"; and "That a dispensation from attending the church shall be granted to such of the students as are not of the Presbyterian communion if they make application for it, and give assurance to the Masters that they will not appear in public nor behave improperly in the time of divine worship." As time went on compulsory attendance at the College church became more and more irksome, even to those students who were not dissenters, and "notwithstanding the care of the College in appointing them a conductor, it is believed that it was not uncommon for some of the less attentive to lose their way."[1] In 1824 a petition, signed by ninety-five students, was presented to the College craving for more liberal terms of dispensation from attendance upon the College church. The petitioners desired to be freed from compulsory attendance at a particular church, and, under such limitations as might seem just and fit, to be at liberty to worship where and under whom they pleased. The Masters having carefully considered the petition and analysed the signatures, resolved to maintain inviolable the laws of the College on the subject. Professor Chalmers, while agreeing with his colleagues as to the general expediency and propriety of the College regulation, disapproved of its application to students belonging to the Established church whose parents wished them to attend divine worship elsewhere, and set forth his views in a lengthy memorial.[2] A list of those students who had not obtained dispensations was made up at the beginning of the session, and this list was read over during the ringing of the bells for each service every Sunday in presence of one or more Professors. Two Professors then took their seats on opposite sides of the gallery, in which the majority of the students sat, and attended to the preservation of good order and decorum among them. Students who arrived late or not at all were fined, and for a time these fines were a source of revenue to the poors' fund of St Leonard's parish.

ST MARY'S COLLEGE IN 1767.

ST MARY'S COLLEGE IN 1901.

As the task of enforcing church attendance became greater year by year, these regulations gradually fell into abeyance. The procession from the common hall to the church was given up, the students going direct to the gallery, where one of themselves was stationed to note the names of absentees. After the Disruption in 1843 compulsory attendance at the College church ceased altogether, and the clauses relating to it in the College laws were subsequently withdrawn. Students were thereafter free to worship where they pleased, and it was left to the ministers of the different congregations in the city to take spiritual oversight of those belonging to their respective denominations.

The students' gallery was swept away when the church was renovated in 1862, and seats were reserved for them in the front of the area. Towards the close of the period dealt with in these pages, it became more and more customary for students of all denominations to attend at least the forenoon service in the College church. This tendency was fostered partly by the institution of monthly University services during the session, and partly by the revived interest in corporate student life which followed on the establishment of a Students' Representative Council in 1885. The scarlet gown reappeared in church after a lengthy absence. Year by year more space was required for members of the University, who began to long for a "College chapel" of their own, and for a time when "the hideous title of the 'College church' will cease to wound the academic ear."[1] And so arose those complications already hinted at, but which belong to later history.

ST MARY'S COLLEGE.

The College of St Mary dates from 1537, in which year it was founded by Archbishop James Beaton. It superseded an older foundation known as the Pædagogium, which had steadily fallen into decay since the erection of the Colleges of St Salvator and St Leonard. The Archbishop having died before his scheme could be fully carried out, it was continued to some extent by his nephew Cardinal Beaton, but it was left to Archbishop Hamilton to complete and organise the College in 1553. It was intended to be a College for instruction in Divinity, Law, and Medicine, as well as in Arts, but its career on this extensive scale was short-lived. Under a new foundation and erection confirmed by Parliament in 1579, it was set apart for the study of Theology only, and it has remained a Divinity College ever since.

This new foundation contemplated a permanent staff of five Masters, but the full number was seldom if ever reached. On account of fluctuating endowments the number was indeed not infrequently reduced to two. After 1747 a Principal and three Professors regularly taught within the College class-rooms. For a considerable time there were two Professors of Divinity, including the Principal, who acted as primarius Professor. They divided the wide field of theology between them, and endeavoured to avoid overlapping in their teaching as best they could. In 1825 the second Professor of Divinity began to devote some attention to Biblical Criticism, and this gradually became the special subject of his Chair, although it was not formally styled a professorship of Divinity and Biblical Criticism until 1862.[1] In 1707 the third mastership was revived and re-endowed as a professorship of Ecclesiastical History by Queen Anne, who provided a salary for the Professor by suppressing six Exchequer bursaries founded by King William III. in 1693. In 1668 a Chair of Hebrew and Oriental Languages was endowed by King Charles II., but it remained unoccupied for twenty years. The first Professor was appointed on 9th April 1688, and the emoluments of the Chair were increased by King William in 1693. For a time the general term Divinity was applied to all the four Chairs in the College. The Professor of Ecclesiastical History held the title of additional or extraordinary Professor of Divinity, and the Professor of Hebrew was at first required to deliver one Divinity lecture weekly.

[1] Ordinance No. 21, sect. 12 (3).

Originally all the Masters had rooms allotted to them within the College buildings, but the practice of living in private houses in the town had set in long before the middle of the eighteenth century. In 1702 a house in South Street, nearly opposite the College gate, was purchased as a residence for Principal Forrester. Some time afterwards a suite of rooms in the north-west corner of the College was fitted up as a house for the Professor of Divinity. Before long the Professor succeeded to the principalship, and decided to retain the College rooms, and these, with many alterations and additions, have since been the official residence of the Principal. Subsequent Professors of Divinity occupied the house in South Street till 1785, when it was sold and the price added to the College funds. Thereafter an allowance for house-rent was made to each of the three Professors, along with a single apartment within the College buildings for their private use.

The arms of Archbishop James Beaton and of Archbishop Hamilton, still to be seen on the buildings of St Mary's College, point back to their erection in the sixteenth century. By the end of the eighteenth century they had probably altered little, and even yet, in spite of repeated alterations and repairs, they still retain the same general outline. On the west side of the quadrangle was the main building, consisting of a common hall, dining-room, classrooms, dormitories, kitchen, &c., with a projecting tower carrying a stone staircase to the upper floors. Along the north was another range of buildings containing apartments of various kinds, the porter's lodge, and the entrance gateway. Under the eastern portion of this range was an open arcade of six arches known as the Cloisters. To the east was the University Library and a massive stone wall built by Principal Howie to enclose his official garden. The southern boundary was partly a wall and partly domestic offices, beyond which lay the College garden and the official gardens of the Professors. The proper upkeep of these buildings would have entailed considerable expense, but as no fund had been appropriated to that purpose, portions of them were allowed to fall into decay. In 1827 the whole block was found by the University Commissioners to be in a wretched and dilapidated condition. The northern portion was no longer used for any purpose, the lower part of the Principal's house was extremely damp, and the interior of the remaining buildings appeared to be wholly unsuitable for the purposes of academic instruction.[1] As a result of this inspection the whole buildings of the College underwent a thorough renovation at the public expense in 1829-30, when a portion of the north wing was removed to make room for an extension of the University Library. Since then extensive improvements have been carried out both by the Board of Works and by the University Court. In 1889-90 a further addition to the University Library was built in the Principal's garden, when the College quadrangle was much enlarged by the removal of the former boundary wall on the east and of the offices and other erections on the south.[2]

To the casual visitor to St Mary's College, the most attractive portion of the buildings is undoubtedly the old Prayer Hall, with its antique oak charter-chests and furniture. Here in bygone times the students assembled twice daily, for morning and for evening prayer. These services were held in obedience to the College laws, but no Professor took any part in them. They were conducted entirely by the students, and the evening service, especially on Sundays, was largely attended by the male portion of the general public, women being at all times excluded. It was in this Hall that Dr Chalmers, when only sixteen years of age, excited "universal wonder and very general admiration" by the originality and eloquence of his prayers.[1] Unfortunately attendance at the Prayer Hall in the evenings led to many irregularities of conduct on the part of students of both Colleges. Principal Haldane alleged that they "assembled there under the pretext of attending prayers, and adjourned to the lodgings of their fellow-students, or to taverns, where they spent their evenings in idleness and dissipation."[2] To such an extent did this evil increase that on 9th December 1824 it was intimated to the students that evening prayers would thenceforth be discontinued, "many reasons having concurred to satisfy the Masters that it was now inexpedient to bring the students from their lodgings throughout the city, in the winter evenings, to attend prayers in the public hall."[3] Morning prayers are still appointed by the College laws, but they have long been associated with the commencement of the day's work in the Divinity class-room.

[2] Early in the nineteenth century the College brew-house and larder had been converted into a stable and coach-house for the Principal. In later times these were chiefly used for storing firewood and lumber; but the Principal's pigs fattened in an adjoining sty down almost to the date of its removal.

In 1747 the membership of the College included eight Foundation bursars, who, along with the Moncreiffe bursar, were entitled to maintenance for four sessions at the public table out of the funds of the College. This table was kept up until 1814, when it was discontinued, and a money allowance made to the bursars instead. In 1874 the number of Foundation bursaries was reduced to six, tenable for three years, and their value increased from £10 to £15 or thereby. In 1895 they were further reduced to three, tenable for the same period, but with their value advanced to £24. They were at the same time renamed the Archbishop Hamilton bursaries, in memory of their founder in 1553. Several other Divinity bursaries were founded in the course of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and nineteenth centuries, but the total number of bursaries belonging to the College was practically the same at the beginning and at the end of the period now dealt with. On the other hand, about an equal number of bursaries were transferable from the United

College when their holders proceeded to the study of Divinity. For many years candidates for Foundation bursaries underwent no examination. They were selected by the Principal and Professors on the basis of certificates of character and proficiency brought from the Professors under whom they had taken their Arts course. The system of awarding bursaries at St Mary's College on the principle of merit ascertained by comparative trial dates from 1855.

Long before the common table was given up, most of the students who were not bursars had ceased to occupy the College rooms. After 1814 collegiate living may be said to have terminated altogether, although the rooms still remained open for the reception of students, and one or two did occasionally make use of them. After the Principal had been suitably provided for in the beginning of the eighteenth century, twenty bedrooms and twenty-four closets were left for the accommodation of students, and more could have been fitted up if necessary. The rooms were not reserved exclusively for Divinity students. Students attending the United College were allowed to occupy vacant apartments on obtaining the permission of the Principal and paying the ordinary dues to the porter. The College rooms could at no time be described as comfortable lodgings, but they were kept in a habitable condition so long as any one might wish to occupy them. They have now all but disappeared, only one small room in the uppermost story of the College being recognisable as a student's "chamber."

Apart from class honours, few prizes fell to the lot of the Divinity student. The book-prizes given by the Earl of Kinnoull as Chancellor of the University were a novelty in their day, and very elaborate regulations were drawn up as to the manner in which they should be competed for. In 1859, after the lapse of more than three-quarters of a century, a Chancellor's prize, of £10 in books, was resumed by the Duke of Argyll and continued annually from 1861. The only permanently endowed prize was that founded by Dr John Gray in 1808, for the best essay on a prescribed subject in some department of theology. It was derived from land, and in consequence its value varied from a maximum of £10 to a minimum of less than half that sum. The prize of £21 known as the Cook and Macfarlan testimonial, instituted in 1847, was converted into a scholarship of the same value, tenable for one year, by the University Commissioners in 1895. The only other scholarships connected with the College were the Tulloch Memorial scholarship, of about £14, subscribed for in 1889, and two Berry scholarships instituted by the University Court on 13th March 1895.

Until 1855 no fees were payable by the students of St Mary's College for attendance on any of the Professors' classes. The Commissioners of 1826 recommended a scale of fees, but the Professors held that "the exacting of fees from theological students would impose a burden on them, and would make but a trifling addition to the dilapidated and very inadequate livings of the Professors in St Mary's College."[1] Having regard to the practice of exacting fees in the Divinity Halls of the other Scottish universities this decision was afterwards reconsidered, and from 1855 to 1873 a fee of £1, 11s. 6d. was charged for each class. On 24th March 1874 the University Court, at the request of the Principal and Professors, raised the fee for all the ordinary classes taught in the College to £2, 2s.

At the middle of the eighteenth century the Divinity session extended from about the 20th of November to the 20th of April, with a break at Christmas. Towards the end of the century it began in the end of November and closed in the beginning of April. By 1826 it had been reduced to a period of exactly four months without any material interruption,—the Christmas holidays being limited to three or four days,—and this appears to have been the normal length of the session for a good many years. More recently a tendency to lengthen it again set in, and in 1896-97 the College opened on 27th October and closed on 17th March.

Down to 1864 many students of Divinity only gave partial attendance on the College classes. These were known as "irregular," "occasional," or "partial" students, and were mostly young men who had gone through an Arts course and were employed as tutors in private families or as teachers in parochial schools. They contented themselves with enrolling their names and attending one or two lectures, after which they disappeared and were not seen again until they were required to deliver their public exercises.

So long as the bulk of the students lived within the College walls they were required to assemble in the quadrangle on Sundays, at the ringing of the College bell, and thence to go in a body to the College loft in the Town church, forenoon and afternoon. It was the duty of one of the students to give in to the Principal a faithful report on the Monday following if any should fail to perform this duty. When the College rooms were abandoned the Sunday procession was given up, and students were simply enjoined to attend public worship in the Town church. About 1840, on the plea of want of room in the Town church, they began to frequent the gallery of the College church and to mix with the Arts students. The Principal of the United College objected to this, and the Divinity students were in consequence enjoined to discontinue the practice and adhere to the Town church.[1] St Mary's church was then in course of erection, and after its completion several gallery pews were reserved for the use of Divinity students. For the next fifty years the College laws enjoined the students "to attend public worship in the Town church or St Mary's." In 1895, with the view of permitting them to attend the

[1] The relations between the two Colleges were at the time rather strained. Among other things, some Divinity students were accused of causing a disturbance at a non-intrusion meeting held in the College church. The case came before the General Assembly, by way of appeal, on 30th May 1840, when the following finding was come to without a vote: "That on the report of the Presbytery there appear no grounds for interfering with the internal government and discipline of the University of St Andrews, therefore dismiss the whole cause, recommending to the Presbytery of St Andrews to continue in the faithful exercise of their constitutional superintendence of the morals and general conversation of students of Theology in that University."—MS. College church, all mention of particular churches was withdrawn from the laws, and they were simply enjoined "to attend public worship with regularity." The restriction to two specified churches had been complained of as "peculiarly irritating" by a writer in the "University News Sheet" as early as February 3rd, 1886.

UNIVERSITY COLLEGE.

University College, Dundee, was founded in 1880 by Miss Mary Ann Baxter of Balgavies, Forfarshire, and Dr John Boyd Baxter, writer, Dundee. It was opened on 5th October 1883 by Professor James Stuart, LL.D., Cambridge, afterwards Rector of the University. On 21st March 1890 the College was affiliated to, and made to form part of, the University by an order of the Commissioners under the Universities (Scotland) Act of 1889, subject to the conditions set forth in an "Agreement" previously come to between the University and the College. This union was declared null and void by the House of Lords on 8th April 1895, on the ground that it ought to have been accomplished by means of an ordinance and not by an order. An ordinance to the same effect was thereafter prepared by the Commissioners, and it received the sanction of the Queen in Council on 15th January 1897;[1] but the University Court postponed its coming into operation until 1st October of that year. Although University College was thus not finally "incorporated with and made to form part of the University of St Andrews" until 1st October 1897, certain of its students had matriculated as students of the University during the ten years beginning with 1885 and ending with 1894. They did so under two separate arrangements—first, as extra-mural students of Science from 1885-86 to 1889-90, and second, as students of what was believed to be a constituent College of the

[1] Ordinance No. 46.

University from 1890-91 to 1894-95. During 1895-96 and 1896-97 no student of University College was allowed to matriculate as a student of the University. The extra-mural arrangement arose in the following manner.

On 30th January 1885 the University Court received and remitted to the careful and favourable consideration of the Senatus Academicus a communication from the Principal of University College on the subject of graduation in Science, in which it was suggested that it might be possible to admit to the degree examinations (conducted by examiners appointed by the University) students who might have received their whole education at the College, provided they had matriculated as students of the University. Before coming to a decision the Senatus determined to be guided by the opinion of counsel as to the powers of the University to confer degrees upon persons who had not been educated within its walls. A memorial and questions were thereupon prepared and submitted to Mr Æneas J. G. Mackay and Mr J. Campbell Smith, who gave it as their opinion that under its charters the University was amply justified in admitting to examination for degrees in Science students who had received their whole education at other seats of learning. These opinions were considered by the Senatus on 10th October 1885, when it was resolved, by a majority, to carry the arrangement into effect, with the sanction of the University Court. The Court met on 2nd November, and agreed to authorise the Senatus to matriculate students of University College who intended to graduate in Science at the University. When the matter came before the Chancellor for his sanction he demurred to such students being allowed to matriculate for the reason that it was a departure from the immemorial usage of the Scottish Universities. After a good deal of correspondence the Chancellor's objection was got over, and on 22nd December he wrote intimating his assent to the resolution of the University Court. This resolution was immediately homologated by the matriculation of ten students who had been preparing for the B.Sc. degree in anticipation of a favourable decision.

Before concluding this Introduction a few observations fall to be made as to the Matriculation Roll itself, and the manner in which it has been edited. The portion now printed has been transcribed from three separate Albums. In 1738, a new Album having become necessary, about 332 leaves of strong unruled white paper were bound up in rough brown leather. The Album thus formed measures 15 inches in height and 10 inches in breadth. It was intended to serve both as a Matriculation Roll and as a Graduation Roll, and so was used from both ends concurrently till the two Rolls met. The Matriculation Roll from 1738-39 to 1887-88 occupies 217 leaves. The Graduation Roll for the same period occupies 105 leaves. The remaining 2 are fly-leaves, while 7 or 8 others have been spoilt and cut out. The volume has been re-backed and otherwise repaired, but is still in a good state of preservation in spite of the enormous amount of handling to which it has been subjected. In designing another Album in 1888, it was thought desirable to discontinue keeping the Matriculation and Graduation Rolls in the same volume, as had been the custom for over three hundred years. The Matriculation Album now in use at St Andrews begins with the academical year 1888-89, and the first 108 pages of it are here printed. It is a rather more massive volume than its predecessor, measuring 15¾ inches by 11 inches, and is composed of stout ruled paper of a bluish tint. From 1885 to 1891 the Dundee students were required to matriculate at St Andrews; but in 1892 a separate Album, uniform in size and style with the St Andrews one, was provided for the enrolment, at Dundee, of matriculated students attending University College.

Beginning with 1865 the old Album was ruled off into columns to contain the number, name, parish, and county of those matriculating. In 1867 a column for the age of the students was added, and from 1868 these columns were regularly headed Nu. | Nomen | Aet. | Parochia | Comitatus. In the new Albums the use of Latin was abolished, and the following printed headings introduced: No. | Name in full | Age last birthday | Native town or parish | County. In printing the Roll these columns have been disregarded and the entries set up continuously and punctuated. Seemingly useless repetitions of words (such as Perth, Perth; Stirling, Stirling) are easily explained when it is borne in mind that the one occurs in the column headed "Native town or parish," and the other in the column headed "County."

With a few exceptions all names and designations have been entered by the students themselves. The Roll is therefore, in one of its aspects, an autograph album of a most interesting kind. This being so, all the entries have been printed exactly as they are written. To this rule no exception has been wittingly made. The printed proof-sheets were carefully compared letter by letter with the original manuscript, and every peculiarity of spelling was scrupulously adhered to. The reader of the printed Roll is thus, as nearly as may be, in the same position as the consulter of the manuscript Roll. There is nothing in the one that is not in the other, and as regards names and designations the two correspond not merely verbally but also literally. Quite a number of students have found it difficult to spell their own names correctly—especially when they attempted to Latinise them, as they were expected to do up to 1888. Nor have they always located their native towns or parishes in their proper counties. It may also be pointed out that the ages given are not in all cases to be relied upon. All students were not a year older at each annual matriculation. Some grew younger rather than older, while others advanced in years by leaps and bounds. It is obvious that in a good many instances the age recorded is purely arbitrary. Any one who cares to tabulate the figures will find numerous unaccountable discrepancies. In the matter of matriculation it may be remarked that no age limit was imposed. So far as ages are recorded, the youngest "bejant" appears to have been twelve when he entered, the oldest sixty-two. The "native town or parish" is likewise frequently misleading. Judging from the information given in the Roll, it was no uncommon thing for a student to have two or more birthplaces. The explanation of this is that he put down the name of the place which he regarded as his home for the time being. This necessarily varied if his parents chanced to remove from one town or parish to another. In a test case, less than half of the students who professed to belong to a certain parish could be traced in its register of births.

The various Latin headings and sub-headings that occur in the Roll have not been reproduced with the same literal exactness as the signatures of the students. In the manuscript they are frequently ungrammatical and otherwise inaccurate. In revising them for the press, errors of fact as well as of spelling and grammar have been corrected, and contracted words have as a rule been extended. Nor have they always been printed in the precise order in which they occur in the Roll, as many of the sub-entries have been inserted where there appeared to be most room for them without regard to chronological sequence.

A certain amount of method will be noticed in the arrangement of the names in the earlier portion of the Roll. So long as a distinction of rank among the students was kept up, noblemen's sons matriculated first as Primars;[1] then followed the Secondars, or gentlemen-commoners; and lastly the Ternars, or those of the ordinary ranks of life. These distinctions were done away with in 1829, and subsequently the students were matriculated without classification, and as far as possible according to alphabetical order—at first of their Christian names, and afterwards of their surnames. On the introduction of annual matriculation it was found impracticable to adhere to any particular order of enrolment, and so the names were entered in whatever order the students presented themselves. It had been a custom of long standing for the Luminator of a class to matriculate last. This designation only occurs once in the present volume (in 1748-49), but the office was nominally in existence for about a century later. The principal duty of a

[1] Lord Kennedy (1809) is said to have been the last Primar.—Evidence, p. 35.

Luminator was to furnish fire and light to his class, in return for which service he enjoyed certain perquisites and privileges.[1]

It is much to be regretted that the University officials did not ascertain and record somewhere the full baptismal name of every student. Middle names were not much in use in the eighteenth century, but long after they had become common they were pretty much ignored in the University records, while the modern practice has been to confine them to initials. It is thus often difficult to recognise and identify in the roll the names of students who in after life have invariably used more than one Christian name. Since the Index was in type a great deal of time has been spent in an effort to complete those entries containing one or more initials. A good many blanks have in this way been filled up from reliable sources, but in numerous cases the quest has proved quite fruitless. Oddly enough, some former students on being applied to for their full names declared they never had middle names, and were at a loss to know how they came to enter superfluous initials in the Roll. In dealing with such cases, the meaningless initials have been retained in the Roll but omitted from the Index. All names and initials which appear in the Index but not in the Roll have been enclosed between square brackets.

In the manuscript, the Sponsio Academica subscribed by students at matriculation is repeated every year from 1747 to 1887. In the new Roll, beginning with 1888, it is written at the beginning once for all. From 1747 to 1866 it remained unchanged except that in 1821 the word est was altered to sit. In 1867 the clause involving adherence to the reformed religion was deleted. It has not been deemed necessary to print the Sponsio more than twice—first in its original form on page 1, and again in its abbreviated form on page 154.

In compiling the Index something more has been attempted than a list of the names occurring in the Roll, arranged in alphabetical order, with a reference to the pages on which they are to be met with. The Index is intended to be an alphabetical register of individual students, and pains have been taken to avoid, on the one hand, indexing the same person as two separate students, and on the other, of indexing two or more separate students as one and the same person. This proved to be a more difficult task than was at first anticipated, and it is to be feared that it has been carried through with only partial success. In writing the Index slips, it was taken for granted that previous to 1859 no student matriculated more than once. But when the slips came to be arranged it was found that this general rule had not been rigidly followed, and that certain students had quite obviously matriculated twice. All doubtful cases were then inquired into, and whenever it seemed clear, from similarity of handwriting or otherwise, that two entries referred to the same person, they were indexed accordingly. In a good many instances the available evidence was not decisive enough to warrant this being done, and so the names have been treated as belonging to different persons and indexed separately. After 1859, when the students matriculated annually (some of them as many as eleven times), a good deal of difficulty was experienced in preserving their identity—especially in the case of those whose courses were not taken in successive years. In spite of every care, it is probable that now and then two students of the same name have been treated as one, while one student matriculating twice or oftener, after lengthened intervals, has been treated as two. The first and last matriculations of not a few students are separated by intervals of many years. Nothing but personal knowledge of the fact could, for instance, have identified the James Mitchell of 1888 as the same person who previously matriculated in 1830. This is an extreme, but not an isolated case. Elderly gentlemen resident in St Andrews were at one time in the habit of matriculating with the view of attending lectures on physiology or natural history and obtaining the use of the library. Some of these had in their youth been students of the University, and so their names reappeared in the Matriculation Roll after the lapse of twenty years and upwards.

The Index contains 6807 names and 11,727 page references. One of the names is that of Professor Lee, who, following, for the last time, an ancient custom applicable to Professors as well as to students, was admitted to membership of the University by being received into the Matriculation Album. The remaining names are those of the 6806 students who, according to the Roll, entered the University during the period dealt with. Unhappily there is too much reason to believe that the Roll has not always been so carefully kept as it ought to have been, and that it is not a complete and final record of students attending the University.[1] In the preparation of the present volume a good many names have been discovered in class-lists and elsewhere which are not to be found in the Roll. In some instances spaces have evidently been left for these names, and some of them have even been entered in pencil by an official. Wherever it could be done with safety these names have been included in the printed Roll and enclosed between square brackets. Until all extant class-lists, prize-lists, presentations to bursaries, and other University and College documents have been scrutinised, and the names occurring in them extracted and indexed, it will be impossible to compile a full and accurate list of students; and even then finality may not be reached, for these various records are likewise more or less defective. The Matriculation Roll is a valuable and authoritative register so far as it goes, but the absence of a name from it is not absolute proof that its owner did not attend classes in either of the Colleges. On the other hand, the occurrence of a name in the Roll is no guarantee that its owner was a bonâ fide student who actually attended classes. There are several names in the Roll which cannot be found in any existing class-list. Now and then an intending student came up and matriculated, but from some unforeseen circumstance was prevented from proceeding further. This, for instance, was the case with Miss Elizabeth Garrett (afterwards Mrs Garrett Anderson, M.D.), the first lady who matriculated at the University. Her name still stands in the Matriculation Roll, but she was never really a student of the University, as she was prohibited from entering the United College class-rooms, and her matriculation and class tickets were declared to be null and of no effect.

Except from 1859 onwards, the Roll yields no information as to the total number of students attending the University in each academical year. Comparative statistics for the whole period from 1747 to 1897 can only be obtained on the basis of first matriculations. These have been collected from the Index, and are given in the appended table of Matriculation Statistics. For the period previous to 1859 it has been found by experimental calculation on averages of ten years, that the number of first matriculations for any year multiplied by 3½ gives approximately the total number of students in attendance at both Colleges for that year. It will be noticed that the smallest number of first matriculations (5) was in 1749-50, and that the largest number (149) was in 1824-25. Both figures are the result of special circumstances. In 1750 a keen controversy was raging as to the validity of the Rector's installation; and the students of the United College, although its Principal was the Rector, were forbidden by the Professors to appear on the day appointed by him for their matriculation. Two of them disobeyed, and were severely reprimanded for their contumacy. Three others afterwards, on separate days, were "received into the Album," the first two of them being also reprimanded. Most of the remainder matriculated in the following year, but it is probable that some of them never matriculated at all. In 1825 Dr Chalmers was at the height of his fame as Professor of Moral Philosophy, and was attracting students of all ages in large numbers to his class-room. The total number of students at the University in 1824-25 appears to have been 343, including 20 irregular students of Divinity.[1] This is the highest recorded attendance during the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The attendance at the University has necessarily fluctuated considerably during the 150 years represented by this volume; but upon the whole the numbers have steadily increased. The average attendance at the two Colleges during the last decade was nearly three times larger than it was during the first. The legislation which culminated in the preliminary examination system of 1892 was calculated to decrease the number of students, and it did so in the case of men; but the loss in this respect was more than counterbalanced by the admission of women to all the classes.

The improvement in respect of College buildings will best be realised by a glance at the illustrations. In the case of the United College the contrast is very great. It is scarcely credible that the north and west wings, as sketched by Oliphant in 1767, were still standing within living memory. The quaint old common hall, with its floor a few feet below the level of the quadrangle, and the rooms which once contained the College library overhead, was the last portion of the old fabric to be removed. As its site was not required for other purposes, an attempt might have been made to restore and preserve it; but, after the manner of the time, it was disposed of to a contractor. While the main building of the United College is entirely new, the ancient walls of St Mary's College still exist, but so transformed as to make it the most typical collegiate building in Scotland. The street frontage of the Library forms a fitting frontispiece to this volume. Since its erection in the seventeenth century, the Library has been the official seat of the University. Here the Comitia, the Senatus Academicus, and the University Court have regularly met; and here, too, the great majority of the students whose names appear in the following pages were admitted to membership of the University.
